That is all covered in our NUR 632 which is “Health Policy: Local to Global”. Not sure if you use that one in your program. I know she would refer to healthcare policy and the objectives below show a connection. Here are the objectives she uses for this course and healthcare policy is not emphasized, but I think with this course you could use a more specific objective to tie that together.

Course Objectives:

1. Interpret epidemiological and biostatistical data to draw inferences regarding the health status of client populations.

2. Analyze the theoretical and research basis of health promotion/disease prevention strategies.

3. Utilize health promotion/disease prevention theories to design, implement and evaluate culturally sensitive health education and counseling interventions.

4. Apply principles of risk assessment and screening to the development of comprehensive population-based health promotion/disease prevention programs.

5. Manage health promotion and disease prevention health care of client populations.

What do you think?

Hi Karla
I like the changes that are being proposed. I think all are necessary. Is there anything that might be related to healthcare policy that should be included? Just a thought about health care reform and the impact on special populations.
Thanks so much

NURSING 513 COURSE DESCRIPTION CHANGE PROPOSAL.

The following was submitted by Dr. Nancy Edwards as a change to the current course description for Nursing 513, “Health Promotion for Special Populations.” This course is offered in the summer at the West Lafayette Campus. Prior to submitting a formal notification to the university, we would like your input regarding these changes. Any suggestions are welcome. Subsequently, the appropriate form will be submitted to you and Dr. Kirkpatrick for approval and signatures.

The following shows the track changes to the current course description.

The course examines wellness and health promotion issues unique to three special populations: clients in rural areas, women, and adolescents, and older adults. Financial, Legal and ethical issues related to practice with special populations are addressed. Evidenced-based standards will be utilized.

Thank you,

Karla Ross
